Discovery at the Library!

Once upon a time, there was a (adjective) boy and a (adjective) girl.

They were (verb -ing) to (a place) when they noticed something (verb -ing) by the side of the road.

“Oh my!” the girl (verb -ed). “What is that?”

“I don’t know,” (verb -ed) the boy adding, “We can find out at the Alamosa Public Library!”

They (verb -ed) as fast as they could to the library. (adverb), the library door was (adjective) and the Librarian was (verb -ing) at her desk, ready to help. The boy and the girl described the thing they saw and asked what it was.

“Why, it’s a (animal)! I’d know one anywhere!” said the Librarian. “I’ll find a book about it for you.”

While they waited, the children looked at books about (noun plural), (noun plural), and (noun plural). The librarian returned as promised with some books for the children to (verb). The two children agreed: there’s so much to see and do at the Library!

As they (verb -ed), they told the Librarian, “We’ll be back again tomorrow!”
